Topics of Concern

- San Antonio is not a "dance community" as are other major cities (New York, Los Angeles)
 - There is a general feeling that dance is not always taken as a serious art form.
 - Some forms of Mexican dance are always associated with Fiestas and perceived as part of the "party"
 - Community does not reward the dancers financially, but with applause.
 - Hard to keep good dancers in area.
- None of the colleges or universities in San Antonio have a dance program
 - Trinity University offers dance in its Physical Education Department
 - Dance Programs typically don't thrive until they are recognized as art.
 - UT Austin has had success and international recognition with their dance department and companies spinning off from the department.
- High school arts magnet programs are relatively new and are still developing.
- It is difficult for groups to get publicity.
 - Cloggers' have a fairly comprehensive list of media sources, as does the Dance Umbrella.
 - The city of San Antonio has an arts listing (<http://www.ci.sat.tx.us/daca/>), as does Artco (<http://www.artco.org/core.html>)
 - The San Antonio Dance Umbrella publishes a Journal for the Dance community to publicize itself.
 - These lists can facilitate the collaboration and networking necessary to increase audience and publicity
- Funding is a problem
 - Grantmaking organizations take longer to make funding decisions — often after deadlines for publicity.
 - Often, companies must publicize events before funding is secured and then cancel the event if the funding doesn't come through.
 - Companies gain a negative image with people in the media and the public as a result.
 - Many companies must have their instructors or lead dancers divide time between administrative duties and dancing.
 - Money is needed "up front" to allow dance companies to plan for the future.
- Performance venues are hard to come by.
 - Carver is a favorite, but since it is closed for renovations this coming year, groups have to look elsewhere.

- Theatres are either too small to make it financially feasible or too large for the audience to fill; dancers get energy from the crowd, and an empty house hurts the quality of the performance.
- Ideal: a big theatre that can be walled off to give the option of smaller seating capacity.
- Collaborations with other dance organizations and art organizations are frequent, but not frequent enough.
- Many people in the community want to learn about dance and attend dance, but don't know where to go.

Ideas for Positive Change

- Serious interest in Dance in San Antonio has arisen during the last 30 years or so. Groups have accomplished a lot of work in that time
- The dance organizations that do exist have had an immense impact on San Antonio
 - The Cloggers' annual festival at the Arneson Theatre draws 800-900 people from all over the United States and several foreign countries; and contributed more than $3 million over the past ten years to the city and businesses of San Antonio.
 - Several hundred dancers work for these represented groups, not mentioning the number who work for other groups.
 - Many dancers work for more than one group or company to learn new styles of dance and also earn more money.
 - Some festivals and concerts (put on by the Dance Umbrella, City Dance, Metro Ballet, and Ballet Folkloricos) draw sold-out crowds night after night, year after year.
- Dancing serves more than just an artistic role in the San Antonio Community
 - The San Antonio Metropolitan Ballet has widened its audience by cooperating with English Professors to perform ballets of selected Literary works to educate students while also exposing them to a wider form of communication.
 - The Cloggers' Showcase, DanzaHispana, City Dance, BalletFolklorico de Navarro y de Mexico, and the Natyanjali School all perform traditional dance from other countries that educates the audiences about the cultures from which the dances originate.
 - Several groups have Arts in Education programs, going directly into the schools to teach students about dance history. Some are associated with Class Acts (an AIE booking agency)
